

CITAMBULOS_ URBAN STRATEGIES A MEXICO CITY – BERLIN DIALOGUE

+++ A dialogue between experts from Mexico City and Berlin will present informal urban strategies on one side and formal governance on the other. The discussion will focus on current political challenges and planning strategies. To be held at the German Center for Architecture DAZ in Berlin, where the exhibition "Citámbulos: Journey to the Mexican Megalopolis" is on show +++

19th of September 2008

Colloquium: 10.00 am - 6.00 pm

Public Event: 6.00 pm, followed by a reception and closing event of the exhibition

Mexico City is an exemplary case for diverse strategies dealing with the challenges of globalisation. The exhibition "Citámbulos" presents the city through a number of specific locations, situations and processes. The exhibition will focus on the city's people and how they are adapting their daily lives to urban processes in their vicinity, and how they are shaping their own physical environment. With this exhibition the DAZ continues the observation of exemplary megacities such as New York and Seoul, the focus of this year's program.

The exhibition "Citámbulos" is arranged along a travelogue through daily life in Mexico City which appeals to all the senses. "Citámbulos", the research collective by the same name, has assembled statements from artists, planners and architects for this presentation which provide insights into urban phenomena that are characteristic for Mexico City and also serve as relevant models within the context of a wider discussion on the future of megacities worldwide. The spontaneous and creative way in which people deal with the city's problems in a context of urban expansion and globalisation are as much part of the exhibit as are the reactions to the challenges of urban densification by professional architects and planners. "Citámbulos" presents these phenomena through a variety of media to form an overall portrait of the megalopolis that is Mexico City.

Citámbulos

The research collective "Citámbulos" from Mexico City is an interdisciplinary team of four experts from the fields of architecture, mathematics, literature and philosophy. Besides the curators Ana Álvarez, Valentina Rojas Loa, Christian von Wissel and Fionn Petch there are more than hundred artists and architects represented at the DAZ. Among others there are shown urban interventions of Mexican architect Héctor Zamora as well as installations and videos of Carlos Ranc, Armando Migueléz, Verena Grimm, Nuria Ibañez, Orlando Jiménez and Paulina del Paso. Among the exhibiting photographs there are several winners of the Biennial of Photography Mexico City like Katya Brailovsky, Livia Corona, Frederico Gama and Dante Busquets. Together with the Mexican architect José Castillo, who is also a main collaborator of the Alfred Herrhausen Society's "Urban Age" project, the curators put the informal aspects of their work into a context with formal architecture.

Colloquium CITAMBULOS_ URBAN STRATEGIES A MEXICO CITY – BERLIN DIALOGUE

The Urban Age is seeing a steady increase in new city-dwellers all over the world. These inhabitants of new and changing urban environments are constantly redefining the urban, suburban and new "rurban" (rural-urban) social and physical make-up while finding their place in the global urban society. In this context, the relationship between present and future citizens and their environment as well as their political representation must be examined in order to be able to focus on the changing needs of the urban structure, space and social organization. Experts will discuss experiences from two emblematic, yet contrary cases – Mexico City, the still-growing megacity, and Berlin, the ever-transforming capital of the German urban system. Their backgrounds include architecture, landscape architecture and urban planning, as well as cultural studies, aesthetics and practical urban intervention in the social sphere.

Panel 1

'The Urban Public: Strategies of Collective Construction of the City'

The first panel seeks to raise questions about how the inhabitants of Mexico City and Berlin find both spontaneous and managed ways of dealing with what the city offers. The active mode of appropriating the city by means of conscious experiencing of everyday life and alternative transport use in a highly car-dominated context like Mexico City enters into dialogue with Berliners' activation of urban residual land through temporary usage as well as new cultural strategies for encouraging urban participation.

The second panel discusses the relationship between local forms of government and the citizens, as well as alternative bottom-up strategies of organizing daily urban reality. Representatives from the urban planning departments of both City Governments will present their specific ideas and projects to deal with the current and future needs of Berlin and Mexico City. Inside knowledge about informal forms of organization in Mexico City are put into context by the broad international experience arising from three years of Urban Age conferences run by the Alfred Herrhausen Society and LSE.
